EUROPE WANTS U. S. TO PAY WAR COST

Some of Europe's statesmen seem to be possessed of a deep-seated conviction that the only impediment to the economic rehabilitation of the world is the refusal of the United States in refusing to shoulder the war burdens of other nations as well as those entailed upon this country by her own participation in the conflict. In some of the claims, the United States is being held liable for the war. It may be said to suggest that this view has no support in logic. Statesmen who are inclined to believe that this country is assuming the debts of others that they are unable to service methods of self-help for their own nations, are not so concerned by more logical proposals.

It is time for Europe's statesmen to abandon the attitude of national independence that seems to be one of the inevitable and desired of injured nations of the nations. This state of mind may result naturally from the almost despairing dread of the first years of the war and the reaction that came through the entry of the American republic with its millions of fighting men and its immense military resources into the conflict thereby turning the scale from apparently impending defeat to early victory.

Apparently European nations having benefited by the lavish expenditure of men and money by America to bring Europe's conflict to an end, find it difficult to settle down to diligent application to the task of working out their own salvation without the ever present aid of the western giant among the powers. European economic restoration must be achieved by the people of Europe, and the delays in inaugurating that self-achieved restoration will only serve to make the task immensely greater when it is found that this country will not shoulder their war obligations.

The United States cannot be accused of any lack of generosity in the circumstances. Some of the allies carried their secret treaties for imperialistic gains over our heads in the peace settlement and on the whole set up a state of things very different from that which armies fought for, but in the meantime our government and our people have spent large sums in relieving the distress of European people. The statesmen who have clung tenaciously to territorial gains while insisting upon maintaining large armies cannot appeal with good grace or with marked success to have their debts to us cancelled, at least until a very different spirit has been shown.

UNCLE SAM IS SPENDING LESS

Again the proof of the pudding is exhibited in the eating thereof. Just when those who are not in accord with the Harding administration, and who are seeking to be restored to political power and place, are emphasizing the extravagance of republican policies, along comes the treasury statement with another showing that lets most of the gas out of the democratic balloon. The savings effected during the first year of Harding's administration were imposing, amounting to more than a billion and a half in cash but this is being carried on into his second year. For the month of July, 1922, the cost of running the government was $157,000,000 less than in July, 1921. This is not exactly in accord with the prognostication made for the administration, but it will be just as welcome to the taxpayers as if the combined battery of the opposing party's prophets had foretold that it would come to pass.

WHERE LABOR BENEFITS

The real reason for the increase of 20 per cent in the wages paid unskilled labor in the steel industry is that not enough labor at the old wage can be secured to do the work. It is merely another illustration of the law of supply and demand. And one of the prime reasons for the shortage is the immigration law passed and approved by President Harding soon after he entered the White house.

The supply of unskilled labor from Europe has been greatly cut down as a result of the law, and the wage earners of this country are benefitting thereby. Protection of American labor from European competition was one of the chief arguments advanced in favor of the immigration law, and now we can see how it has worked out.

Precisely the same principle is contained in the protective tariff bill, passed by the republicans in the senate and house and now with Harding. Curtail the influx of foreign working men and the wages of our own laborers remain high, curtail the importation of the products of that cheap foreign labor and the prices of our domestic products maintain their level, to be passed on in good wages to the artisans in our factories.
